

Ideas for Using Quotes in Your Classroom

A. Quote of the Day – Incorporate a quote into daily announcements, the school newspaper, school display case, bulletin board, or marquee.

B. Writing or Speaking Prompt – Use a quote as a writing prompt:

U.S. or World History – Select one of the quotes that represent a specific time and place. Have students describe the context for the quote at that time and place, then discuss and write about the relevance of the quote today.

Government – Select a quote related to one of the founding documents (Declaration of Independence, Constitution, Federalist Papers, Bill of Rights). Have students discuss and write about the relevance of the document today.

Select a quote that, for its time, influenced the “public agenda.” Have students write about the quote in terms of how it was used to influence the public agenda at that time. Have students locate a recent quote from a national, state, or local figure and describe how they think the quote could influence the public agenda today.

English/Language Arts – Have students incorporate one of the quotes effectively into a piece of writing. Discuss how writers and speakers use quotes to persuade, provide point of view, etc.

Divide the students into groups of three and assign each triad a different quote. Give the students five minutes to work together to outline a “1-Minute Speech” that one of the students will give to the class. The theme of the speech could be:

- Why this quote is important to remember today.
- What this quote means to youth today.
- Incorporate the quote into a topic of your choosing.

General – Select several quotes that relate to the role and responsibility of citizenship. Have each student choose the quote that most resonates with him/her and discuss and write about his/her reasoning.

C. “Public Service Ads”

As either an in-class assignment, or as part of a co-curricular activity, have students select quotes that are meaningful to them and design posters that can be displayed in the hallways. The posters should:

- Incorporate at least one of the quotes.
- Convince others that active, effective citizenship is important.
